Shelly -

Thank you for your quick review and forbearance on the time constraints. I was a bit irritated on the time issue since there had been no mention of this until the conference call. However, after giving it more thought over the weekend and talking through it further with Ben Jessup this morning, I am optimistic that provided I can grab a bit more money the latter part of the summer or early fall, we can move these initial tasks into developing actual nutrient translators.

I will keep you posted as to the approval and the next steps.

Hi Forrest.

Given the time constraints (and lack of flexibility on end date) this seems like a reasonable and appropriate scope of work.

Thanks for sending our way. No edits on our end.

James and Shelly -

I've updated the technical direction (scope of work) as we discussed on Thursday, July 19, 2012, and wanted you all to review and make any edits that you deem appropriate before I send it on to Katherine in Washington. I talked with Ben Jessup this morning before editing to discuss his perspectives. As you will see I've kept the data compilation (Task 3) in the TD since we may have hours available to start but not finish.

I would appreciate if you would give it a quick read and get back to me today since I would like to get the final doc to Katherine by the end of day. Lastly, once the TD is issued, I will arrange for a conference call sometime the second week of August, since Ben will be on leave next week, to get the process started and based on consensus of all parties, hold calls every other week to keep us on schedule.
